Summary of findings

Overall summary

Garland House is a residential care home without nursing which is registered to provide personal care for up to 20 people aged 65 and over. At the time of the inspection 15 people were living at the home. People living at the home had a variety of care and support needs, such as dementia and physical disabilities. The service is provided from an adapted home across two floors.

We found the following examples of good practice.

The service supported people to maintain safe contact with friends and family. People were supported to use the telephone and internet, and visits were facilitated using the garden and indoors with the use of protective screens.

Plans were in place to isolate people with COVID-19 to minimise transmission. The service had good supplies of personal protective equipment (PPE) that were readily available at stations throughout the service.

The provider had measures in place to prevent visitors from catching and spreading infections. Visitors were asked health screening questions and to sanitise their hands on arrival. Temperature checks and lateral flow tests were carried out and once a negative result was received staff facilitated the visit.

Staff had received training on how to keep people safe during the COVID-19 pandemic and staff and residents were regularly tested for COVID-19. The building was clean and free from clutter and high touch areas were subject to enhanced cleaning.

Staff ensured people's welfare had been maintained by facilitating socially distanced activities, such as creative sessions and sharing stories to stimulate discussions. People self-isolating received one to one support with activities.

As part of CQC's response to the coronavirus pandemic we are looking at the preparedness of care homes in relation to infection prevention and control. This was a targeted inspection looking at the infection control and prevention measures the provider has in place.
