Detailed findings

Background to this inspection

We carried out this inspection under Section 60 of the Health and Social Care Act 2008 (the Act) as part of our regulatory functions. This inspection was planned to check whether the provider was meeting the legal requirements and regulations associated with the Act, to look at the overall quality of the service, and to provide a rating for the service under the Care Act 2014.

Inspection team:

The inspection was carried out by a single inspector and one Expert by Experience made telephone calls to people using the service and their relatives. An Expert by Experience is a person who has personal experience of using or caring for someone who uses this type of care service.

Service and service type:

This service provides care and support to people living in their own homes, so that they can live as independently as possible. The service had a manager registered with the Care Quality Commission. This means that they and the provider are legally responsible for how the service is run and for the quality and safety of the care provided.

Notice of inspection:

We gave the service two working days' notice of the inspection site visit because the registered manager is sometimes out of the office supporting staff or providing care. We needed to be sure that they would be available.

Inspection site visit activity started on 20 March 2019 where we visited the services office to review records and other documents relating to the running of the service. We also contacted people and staff to obtain their views and opinions.

What we did:

Before the inspection, we asked the provider to complete a Provider Information Return (PIR). This is a form that asks the provider to give some key information about the service, what the service does well and improvements they plan to make. We looked at the PIR and at notifications we had received. Notifications are certain events that providers are required by law to tell us about.

During our inspection we checked recruitment, training and supervision records for four staff and we looked at four people's care records. We also looked at a range of records about how the service was managed. We spoke with 14 people, four relatives, three care staff and the registered manager. We also contacted two healthcare professionals for their opinion of the service.

Is the service safe?

Our findings

Safe – this means we looked for evidence that people were protected from abuse and avoidable harm. At last inspection on 1 March 2018 we asked the provider to make improvements in relation to risk assessments to manage people's safety and this action has been completed.

People were safe and protected from avoidable harm. Legal requirements were met.

Systems and processes to safeguard people from the risk of abuse

- People told us they felt safe. One person said, "Safe, no problems at all. Absolutely brilliant, I can't fault them [staff] at all". Relatives also told us they felt people were safe. A relative said, "I have no worries. [Person] is safe with the carers".
- People benefitted from staff who knew how to raise safeguarding issues. One member of staff told us, "Any concerns and I'd call the manager and local authorities".
- The service had systems in place to investigate and report concerns to the appropriate authorities.

Assessing risk, safety monitoring and management

- Where risks were identified, assessments were in place to manage the risk. Risks were regularly reviewed and updated. Risks included; choking, challenging behaviour, nutrition and the environment. Where appropriate, guidance from healthcare professionals was included in the support plan.
- The provider had a system to record accidents and incidents. We viewed the accidents log and saw appropriate action had been taken where necessary.
- The provider monitored visits to ensure staff were punctual and that visits were not missed. Staff logged in via mobile phones allowing the registered manager to monitor visit times. No missed visits were recorded.

Staffing and recruitment

- People were supported by a strong, committed staff team. Sufficient staff were deployed to meet people's needs. Where two staff were required to support people, we saw they were consistently deployed. One staff member said, "Yes there is enough staff". Another said, "Yes, we have plenty of staff".
- People were protected against the employment of unsuitable staff as the provider followed robust, safe recruitment practices.

Using medicines safely

- Medicines were managed safely and people received their medicines as prescribed. Medicine administration records (MAR) were completed fully and accurately.
- Staff competency to safely administer medicine was regularly checked.
- One person told us, "[Staff] help me with my tablets. Look after them very well. Very insistent and see that I have my tablets at the right time".

Preventing and controlling infection

- The staff were trained in infection control. The staff had access to protective personal equipment.
- One staff member said, "I have access to plenty of gloves and aprons".

Learning lessons when things go wrong

- Management used accidents and incidents to improve the service. For example, one person suffered a series of falls. Following investigation staff were guided to encourage the person to use their walking frame. Records confirmed the incidence of falls had reduced.

Is the service effective?

Our findings

Effective – this means we looked for evidence that people's care, treatment and support achieved good outcomes and promoted a good quality of life, based on best available evidence

Good: People's outcomes were consistently good, and people's feedback confirmed this.

Assessing people's needs and choices; delivering care in line with standards, guidance and the law

- People and their relatives were involved in the assessment process. People's needs were assessed prior to receiving a service to ensure staff could meet those needs.
- One relative commented, "Carers know exactly what they are doing".
- Expected outcomes were identified, and care and support regularly reviewed in line with legislation and best practice. For example, people's preferred methods of communication were assessed and guidance provided for staff in line with the Accessible Information Standard (AIS).

Staff support: induction, training, skills and experience

- People were supported by skilled staff that had ongoing training relevant to their roles.
- Staff completed induction and shadowed experienced staff before working alone.
- Staff were well supported in their roles and had regular one to one meetings with their line manager (supervision) to discuss practice and raise issues. One staff member said, "Yes, I get great support at work. They [provider] are so good to me".

Supporting people to eat and drink enough to maintain a balanced diet

- People were supported with their meals appropriately. One relative commented, "When they are here they [staff] do all her meals. No problems at all".
- Care plans contained details of people's meal preferences, likes and dislikes. Any allergies were highlighted.
- Staff ensured people were supported in relation to their needs. For example, one person was at risk of choking. The person had been assessed by a speech and language therapist (SALT) and guidance for staff was contained in the care plan. Staff we spoke with were aware of this guidance.

Staff working with other agencies to provide consistent, effective, timely care

- Various professionals were involved in assessing, planning and evaluating people's care and treatment. This included GPs, occupational therapists and NHS trust professionals.
- Where appropriate, reviews of people's care involved relevant healthcare professionals.
- One healthcare professional told us, "They [Jes Care] deliver exceptional services, nothing is ever too much of a problem to them".

Ensuring consent to care and treatment in line with law and guidance

The Mental Capacity Act 2005 (MCA) provides a legal framework for making particular decisions on behalf of people who may lack the mental capacity to do so for themselves. The Act requires that, as far as possible, people make their own decisions and are helped to do so when needed. When they lack mental capacity to take particular decisions, any made on their behalf must be in their best interests and as least restrictive as possible. People can only be deprived of their liberty to receive care and treatment with appropriate legal authority.

- Staff worked to the principles of the MCA. One staff member told us, "It is about respecting the clients and their decisions. I support clients to make their own decisions".
- One person spoke about consent. They said, "Yes, they [staff] do ask me what I want done and ask before they do it, they are very good about these things".
- Care plans contained consent to care documents signed by the person or their legal representative.

Is the service caring?

Our findings

Caring – this means we looked for evidence that the service involved people and treated them with compassion, kindness, dignity and respect

Good: People were supported and treated with dignity and respect; and involved as partners in their care.

Ensuring people are well treated and supported; respecting equality and diversity

- People and relatives confirmed staff treated people in a caring way. One person said, "Very friendly [staff], more like friends in how they care. Very caring, I couldn't wish for anything better". A relative said, "Carers really kind and helpful. An exceptionally good agency".
- Staff knew people's individual needs very well as they had built up a trusting relationship over a period of time. One staff member said, "I get on well with the clients and their families. They are wonderful".
- People's well-being was assessed and any needs were highlighted. This allowed staff to support people emotionally, as individuals. For example, one person could become anxious and asked staff to show 'empathy and a caring nature' and to be 'honest and consistent'. Staff were aware of, and acted upon this person's request.

Supporting people to express their views and be involved in making decisions about their care

- People were involved in their care. Records showed staff discussed people's care on an on-going basis.
- Where required, information was provided to people in a format that was accessible to them and we saw accessible information was well embedded in care plans. For example, care plans were available in large print and, where appropriate, some sections of care plans contained pictures to help people to understand. Staff told us they explained procedures to people to help them make informed decisions.

Respecting and promoting people's privacy, dignity and independence

- Staff promoted people's independence. Care plans guided staff to encourage people to do what they could for themselves. One relative told us, "The carer's only help when asked to help. [Person] likes to be as independent as possible. The carers know what [person] needs".
- People were treated with dignity and respect. When staff spoke with us about people, they were respectful and displayed genuine affection. Language used in care plans was respectful. Staff told us people's privacy was respected.
- One relative told us staff treated a person with dignity and respect by, "Paying huge attention to detail and following [person's] wishes".
- The provider recognised people's diversity and they had policies in place that highlighted the importance of treating everyone equally. People's diverse needs, such as their cultural or religious needs were reflected in their care plans. Staff told us they treated people as individuals and respected their choices.
- The provider ensured people's confidentiality was respected. Records containing people's personal information were kept in offices which were locked and only accessible to authorised persons.

Is the service responsive?

Our findings

Responsive – this means we looked for evidence that the service met people's needs

Good: People's needs were met through good organisation and delivery.

Planning personalised care to meet people's needs, preferences, interests and give them choice and control

- People's likes and dislikes were well known to the staff team and were highlighted in people's care plans. For example, one person liked reading and watching TV. Another person was keen on audio books. Staff were aware of people's personal preferences.
- The management team ensured people's needs and any changes were communicated effectively amongst the staff. Information was shared between staff through secure mobile telephone apps. This ensured important information was acted upon where necessary and recorded to ensure monitoring of people's progress.
- The service responded to people's changing needs. We saw numerous examples of people being able to change visit times to allow them to attend other appointments. The service also responded to changes in people's healthcare needs. For example, one person was breathless and was referred to a GP. The person's inhaler was changed and incidence of breathlessness were reduced.
- One person spoke about how the service responded. They said, "They listen to what I want changed and they write in the book (care plan) every time they come".
- One staff member said, "Do we treat clients as individuals? Absolutely, we are all different with different wants. That's how we do it".

Improving care quality in response to complaints or concerns

- The provider had effective systems to manage complaints and the records showed any concerns raised were recorded, fully investigated and responded to as per provider's policy.
- Relatives told us they knew how to make a complaint and were confident action would be taken. Details of how to complain were provided to people and their relatives.
- One person said, "I've been given a copy of the complaints, it's in the booklet. I've no complaints at all". A relative said, "I can't fault anything at all. No complaints".
- The registered manager monitored feedback from people and their relatives and used this information to improve the service. For example, one person, who was a younger adult, requested a member of staff who was closer to their own age. This request was actioned.
- The registered manager told us, "I deal with any queries or concerns long before a formal complaint is needed. The families just come to me and we deal with it".

End of life care and support

- There were systems in place to record people's advanced wishes. This included funeral arrangements and whether people wished to be resuscitated in the event of a cardiac arrest.
- One person had stipulated they wished to be cared for at home as they approached end of life. Staff had been trained in palliative care and the service had strong links with the local hospice. This meant people's advanced wishes would be respected.

Is the service well-led?

Our findings

Well-Led – this means we looked for evidence that service leadership, management and governance assured high-quality, person-centred care; supported learning and innovation; and promoted an open, fair culture

Good: At the last inspection on 1 March 2018 we asked the provider to take action in relation to quality monitoring systems, used to improve the service. This action has been completed. The service was consistently managed and well-led. Leaders and the culture they created promoted high-quality, person-centred care.

Planning and promoting person-centred, high-quality care and support with openness; and how the provider understands and acts on their duty of candour responsibility

- Relatives told us they knew the registered manager and had confidence in the service.
- One person said, "It's well managed, I know and see the manager, can get through to the office. Manager comes round to check if you are alright".
- Staff spoke positively about the registered manager. Comments included; "I get on very well with [registered manager]. She is very understanding and caring" and "This is well organised and communication is good. The manager is great".
- Throughout the inspection the registered manager and staff were open and honest about their work and the challenges they faced.

Managers and staff being clear about their roles, and understanding quality performance, risks and regulatory requirements

- The registered manager had effective quality assurance systems in place. These included, audits of medicine records, care planning, staff files and quality satisfaction surveys. This allowed the registered manager to look for continuous improvements. For example, one audit identified a person required an environment assessment. We saw this assessment had been completed.
- All the records we saw were accurate and up to date.
- There was a clear management and staffing structure and staff were aware of their roles and responsibilities. We saw a positive team culture that was clearly embedded in the service.
- Services that provide health and social care to people are required to inform the Care Quality Commission (CQC), of important events that happen in the service. The registered manager was aware of their responsibilities and had systems in place to report appropriately to CQC about reportable events.

Engaging and involving people using the service, the public and staff, fully considering their equality characteristics

- People had opportunities to complete surveys or raise any comments. Where people made requests, the registered manager took action. For example, one person requested a female carer. This request was granted.
- One person said, "With this manager, when you ask for something, you get it".
- Staff told us they felt listened to and valued. Staff told us communication was good and they felt involved and informed.

Working in partnership with others

- The registered manager worked in partnership with health and social care professionals to ensure people received support to meet their needs.
- The service also worked in partnership with the local authority and was a member of the Oxfordshire Association of Care Providers.
