Summary of findings

Overall summary

Healey House is a residential care home that provides accommodation and support for up to 28 older people. At the time of our inspection, there were nine people living at the home.

We found the following examples of good practice.

At the time of our inspection, the home was closed to visitors. People were supported to keep in touch with their relatives through phone calls. The maintenance staff had built a visitor pod into a room of the home which had its own designated entrance for relatives which will be used when open to visitors. A screen had been built between the person and the visitor section, ensuring contactless visits could take place safely. The area had a speaker system to enable people and their relatives to communicate clearly and there was a call bell in the room in case people needed support from staff.

The registered manager had ensured that there were adequate supplies of personal protective equipment (PPE) throughout the pandemic. Staff were seen to be using PPE correctly and disposing of it safely. There were signs around the home to remind staff of the correct procedures for putting on and removing PPE safely.

People's bedrooms had a sink to support handwashing and the registered manager had installed soap and paper towel dispensers on the wall above each sink. Hand sanitisers in the corridors were activated by a sensor which meant that staff did not need to touch them.

There was a regular housekeeper at the service and cleaning schedules in place. When the housekeeper had needed to self isolate, the service had used an external cleaning company. This company had been contracted to 'fog' the communal areas of the home as well people's bedrooms.
