Summary of findings

Overall summary

Woodside Grange Care Home is a residential care home providing personal and nursing care for up to 121 people. The home supported people with varied needs in six areas, spread across three floors in a purpose-built building. This included older people, people living with dementia and people with a learning disability or autism. 102 people were using the service when we inspected.

The service had prepared an area as a designated setting which could accommodate up to 17 people with a positive Covid-19 status. The home had previously been able to offer between five and 10 designated setting beds but as demand had recently increased the provider had made changes to the area in order to safely increase capacity.

We found the following examples of good practice.

All visitors to the home, including visiting professionals, were asked for evidence of a recent lateral flow test. Evidence of vaccination in the form of COVID passports were also requested and temperatures taken to screen for symptoms.

The home had been successfully managing a designated setting and had demonstrated the knowledge and skills to keep people safe and avoid cross contamination. Careful thought had gone into the best way to increase bed capacity without compromising safety.

The entrance to the red zone (an area where people were COVID positive) was to be moved in order to extend the area but was still secure as there was a keypad lock on the door to prevent people from accessing it accidentally. Signs on these doors made it very clear that it was the entrance to a red zone and what that meant.

There was an entrance specifically for people arriving into the red zone of the home from hospital to avoid them passing through any other area of the home. This had been used successfully since the home first offered designated setting beds and admissions had been running very smoothly. The registered manager had built a good relationship with the hospital discharge team and no one was moved to the home without a full handover. The hospital always called ahead to let the home know when a person was being transported so staff at the home could manage their arrival safely.

The staff room and changing facilities were being relocated to maximise bed space but these were still within the red zone of the designated setting. Staff also had access to a shower within the designated setting.

The home was very clean and tidy. Enhanced cleaning schedules were in place which included regular cleaning of touch areas such as handrails and door handles to reduce the risk of cross infection. Staff working on the red zone were responsible for cleaning this area to avoid domestic staff moving between zones and keep the number of staff entering the area to a minimum.

There was a detailed infection prevention and control policy in place and regular checks were completed. Staff had received training in the appropriate use of Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) and infection prevention and control training. Information was displayed throughout the home to remind staff how to use PPE correctly and how to prevent the spread of infection.

There was a plentiful supply of PPE and additional PPE stations had been placed in the red zone to ensure staff had safe and easy access. Clinical waste bins were in place for the safe disposal of used PPE.

We were assured that this service met good infection prevention and control guidelines as a designated care setting.
